

TELEGRAPHIC.

YESTERDAY'S NOON DISPATCHES.

Our Difficulties with England.

IMPEACHMENT AGAIN TALKED ABOUT.

JOHNSON'S REPLY TO GRANT'S LAST.

VOTE ON THE ALABAMA CONSTITUTION.

Suffering in North Carolina.

FENIAN DEMONSTRATION AT TOLEDO.

DESTRUCTIVE CONFLAGRATIONS, ETC.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.

The World's special states that it is confidently expected that within a few days Mr. Grant will issue his final statement of the case in which the legitimate demands of Britain for the losses occasioned by the privateers will be met, and the current and imprisonment of American citizens in Ireland and Eng- land, are to be most definitely made.

The Tribune's special says the reconstruction committee have taken the Grand Jury into their confidence, and are in consultation with a view to ascertain if the President has laid himself liable to impeachment. It will make a thorough examination of the whole case, and the President to hinder the proper execution of the laws.

The President's special states that the President will make public to-day his reply to Gen. Grant. It will be supported by the other members of the various members of the Cabinet, confirmatory of the President's version of the late difficulty in the war office.

The Tribune's Washington dispatch says private telegrams from Alabama state that the election there is progressing quietly, and the adoption of the constitution caused by an overwhelming majority.

The report of the freedmen's bureau came from the Freedmen's Bureau that there is considerable suffering there among the freedmen from the non-payment of wages due, from inability by many to find work, and from the employers to support or pay the freedmen until the next planting season opens. During December, 3,500 rations were distributed to poor persons, or poor and destitute people.

MONROVIA, Feb. 6.

All the return to last night indicate the defeat of the no confidence bill. Five counties, with an aggregate registration of 19,345, give the first day's vote 2,734 and negroes 2,300. The others, Lee and Macon, come out on the side of the no. The latest vote, gave a vote up to last night of 3,864 negroes to 16 whites, the latter all candidates. The negroes' votes are falling off and there is a clamor for reducing taxation to the lowest possible point, with a view to meet the demands of the negroes.

MONROVIA, Feb. 6.

The report of the freedmen's bureau comes from the Freedmen's Bureau that there is considerable suffering there among the freedmen from the non-payment of wages due, from inability by many to find work, and from the employers to support or pay the freedmen until the next planting season opens. During December, 3,500 rations were distributed to poor persons, or poor and destitute people.

MONROVIA, Feb. 6.

An enthusiastic reception of General O'Neill, President of the Fenian Brotherhood, Vice President Gibbons and Colonel Moore, at the Pines Hotel, New Orleans, was given to him by the Fenians, who are mostly consumers of a large amount of passengers, whisky and express goods, the latter mostly oysters. A corps on board to receive him.

TOMATO, O. Feb. 6.

A baggage car on the P. & L. R. for Wayne and Chicago, enroute bound West, caught fire from sparks from the locomotive, near Columbia City, Indiana, yesterday. The baggage was mostly consumers of a large amount of passengers, whisky and express goods, the latter mostly oysters. A corps on board to receive him.

SPRINGFIELD, PA., Feb. 6.

The Adams Building was burned last night; Gordon & Etches, grocery, Blodget & Co., stove dealers; Good & Co., auctioneers; Noyes' Academy; York's Inn, hotel; and a number of small and sundry offices were burned out. Loss $150,000. Insured.

NEW YORK, Feb. 6.

Rev. Benjamin B. Fiddiman, of the Protestant Episcopal Bishop, in convention at St. John's Chapel, in this city, as the Missionary Bishop of Africa.

ALBANY, N. Y., Feb. 6.

A large meeting was held last evening, which was addressed by prominent members of the Legislature, and resolutions adopted in honor of the negroes of the rights of naturalized citizens abroad.

KINGSTON, CANADA, Feb. 6.

Hutchinson's clothing store, Boyce's soap-knit factory and Burns' shoe store were burned last night.

Montreal, Feb. 6.

The exportation of silver will be commenced immediately.

Curious Phenomenon Observed in Michigan.

The Detroit Post, of the 1st, says:

A gentleman employed in the Detroit and Milwaukee depots that about 12:45 o'clock yesterday morning he witnessed no parallel in his own experience. He was passing up Woodward avenue, when he suddenly discovered that he was alone in the street. The moon was down, the sky was clouded and there were no street lamps lighted, so he stopped to have a cigarette. His first thought was that there was an explosion in the street lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion, but that it was the aurora borealis, but that it was some of the well-known effects of this illumination of the heavens.

The thought of meteors next occurred to him, but he saw no meteoric bodies, either in the sky or on the ground, from what he had before witnessed when large meteors had fallen in close proximity to him. The whole city was dark, and the weather was clear.

He was looking up the street, and saw both buildings and trees, and then turned the length of the avenue to the right, the Canada shore beyond. The light lasted from a quarter to half a minute. He described it as being like a bright red flame, not yet a steady light, but seemed to come in waves, and he could think of no comparison except the dipping of the candle in the lamp underneath which he was just passing; but looking back he saw that it was not an explosion